Tony, thank you for the offer. Cami is going to leave her meeting with ODEQ to participate in the meeting/call with the City of Portland, so it's up to you.--Cindy

Cindy,
I'm familiar with Michael Jordan and Nils Tillstrom from Portland. I can, if need be, work around my other calendar items to participate tomorrow at 12:30, if needed. Please let me know.

Cami, it appears that you, as well as Marianne and Tony, have something scheduled at 12:30

Wednesday. It would be helpful if I know who will participate before I officially forward this invitation from OCIR. –Cindy, x. 1815

Re: Clean-up: Portland Harbor Superfund Site – Partnership with EPA; Update on Status and City's Interests

Accompanying: Vicki Cram (Squire Patton Boggs-SPB staff copied above)

Background from the City of Portland:

The City of Portland has a vested interest in a successful clean-up of the Portland Harbor Superfund site and has been working closely with EPA. The Willamette River is critical to the health and well-being of the City's citizens and economy. The City is also one of a number of parties called on to share in payment of clean-up costs. The city's interests are many – including fiscal responsibility, environmental protection, economic development and livability. The City is working with EPA and other stakeholders to provide for meaningful public involvement as it is essential that the public and stakeholders have a clear understanding of the process, costs, benefits and impacts for each clean up option. Additionally, the City believes that it is important to stay on schedule for a Record of Decision in 2016. The head of the City of Portland's Bureau of Environmental Services, Michael Jordan, is traveling to DC as part of a larger Chamber of Commerce-type trip and is meeting with the Oregon Congressional delegation to brief them on the progress.
